Miners Returning To Work

Orders to the union miners throughout District 18 to go back to work have been received from Secretary Carter and men in most of the camps returned to work yesterday.

A number of the Blairmore men resumed work this morning, but the majority are still off owing to a shortage of horses.

The members of the local union have held a number of busy sessions during the week.

The miners have been instructed to return to work, pending an investigation of the high cost of living as it affects the wages of the workmen, and which the government has undertaken to do as requested by the miners.

Every Adult Male Canadian Asked 24 Questions

Ottawa, Nov. 29.—There is to be a national service week in Canada. The date will be announced shortly by R. B. Bennett, director of national service. It will probably be the first week in January.

One of the features of the week will be the issuance of a card to every man in Canada. This card will be based upon a number of questions regarding national service and must be filled in and returned by all men between the ages of 16 and 65.

The questions are as follows:

1. What is your name?
2. How old are you?
3. Where do you live, province?
4. Name or city, town, village or postoffice, street, number?
5. In what country were you born?
6. In what country was your father born?
7. In what country was your mother born?
8. Were you born a British subject?
9. If not, are you naturalized?
10. How much time have you lost in last 12 months from sickness?
11. Have you full use of your arms?
12. Of your legs?
13. Of your sight?
14. Of your hearing?
15. Which are you—married, single or a widow?
16. How many persons besides yourself do you support?
17. What are you working at for a living?
18. Whom do you work for?
19. Have you a trade or profession?
20. If so, what?
21. Are you working now?
22. If not, why?
23. Would you be willing to change your present work for other necessary work at the same pay during the war?
24. Are you willing, if your railway fare is paid, to leave where you now live and go to some other place in Canada to do such work?

Two millions of these cards will be issued and it is understood that the services of Canadian postmasters will be required to issue them.

The object is to secure an accurate inventory of the number of men available for the vital industries, such as agriculture and munitions manufacture.

There is nothing in the cards which can be interpreted as showing a move toward conscription, but, of course, the number of men of military age available for recruiting will be ascertained.

He stared at her for a moment without speaking. At that moment there came to the ears of both the sound of Joe Wright's voice, loud, harsh, angry, from the floor above, the terrace, where he appeared to be engaged in an altercation with Captain Dalmaine.

Lord Moorhampton drew himself up.

"What an appalling voice that fellow has got!" he exclaimed irritably.

"It's the most disagreeable voice I ever heard," chimed in Mabin with a smile. "I wonder what Lord Moorhampton turned round and said smiling, half in surprise, and half in amusement, stooping to look into her face in the green depths of his eyes.

But he could not see much of it, for Mabin bent her head and bit her lip, and as she was sitting with her back to the fading light, the rose red color which at once spread over her cheek and forehead could not be detected.

"Have you met Wright before?" asked Lord Moorhampton abruptly.

She looked up, catching her breath.

"I—I—I don't know," she said, speaking in jerks, and it was evident again that "whether" was written all over her face. "I've—I've heard his voice before. He was talking—he was attacking—in a City office, a man who I am sure was your son Captain Dalmaine."

Lord Moorhampton heard her in dead silence, without moving a muscle, so that she could not tell whether he believed her or not. Suddenly aware that she dared not trust herself to say another word, for fear of breaking down, she rose lightly to her feet and was hurrying towards the door when his voice, grave and commanding, checked her.

"No, don't go away. Come back, and sit down."

She hesitated, then turned, and hanging her head, staggered back into the chair she had left. Lord Moorhampton's hand, touching the touching the electric button near the door, flooded the room with light.

Then he came back and took the chair opposite to her on the other side of the room.

"Now," said she in the same grave tones, "tell me all about it."

She looked up at him agitated and distressed.

"I heard what was going on, but I could do nothing for I was locked in the room. When I tried to open the door he was knocked down, was just able to let me out before he became unconscious, with a great wound in his head. Another man had gone away, and I never heard of him again until this day here. I had no idea who he was—till then. But it was he, I know, who attacked your son, and I am sure he will be sent out to happen again. They told me the man attacked walked away all right, but that can't be true. It is for you to find out what happened."

Mr. Wright is considered, I believe, if he's not, he means to be if he could."

Lord Moorhampton listened to this recital without one word or one sign either of belief or disbelief. Then, when she paused, he rose slowly, and began to walk up and down the room, his hands clasped behind his back, thoughtful, bewildered, evidently a prey to the most agitating reflections.

At length he stopped short a few paces from her, Mabin said in a strangled voice.

"What could I do but come and tell you? That is all I could do, and our friend of the man who was either murdered or half-murdered." I found a scrap of a half-burnt letter at the hotel where he had been, and it was in his fair handwriting, tucked behind his back, thoughtful, bewildered, evidently a prey to the most agitating reflections.

"It was good of you. But how came you interested in him? From the moment he spoke to me, I liked him, I thought him strangely nice—and unlike other people."

"And you knew he was deliberately murdered by Wright?"

"I do think so. But I have something more to tell you, Lord Moorhampton."

"Something more?"

He had taken up the telephone that lay on his desk, and now he put it down in his hand, and then he said,

"Yes. He has left a child, a little son. He is at my mother's house."

CHEW "PAY ROLL" TOBACCO

He is about four years old, and the sweetest little boy in the world."

Lord Moorhampton was moved at the very depths of his being.

"A child! A son? Ciprian has a son? How could you find him? Tell me without the least reserve everything you know, from the very beginning."

Mabin obeyed, losing her fears and her nervousness when she saw that at last she had aroused in him the keenest and liveliest attention. No detail did she omit, and she was gratified to find that he was struck by the boy he had wounded by his comparative coolness about the fate of the son who had been estranged from him. So he was keenly interested about the boy.

"If he was married," he exclaimed more than once, with such evident pleasure that she was struck by the beauty of his hair.

The being mistrustful of Lady Moorhampton, could not but feel that Lord Moorhampton had been poisoned against his son Ciprian by his wife, for some reason which she could not even guess at. But the secret of it was that he felt more interested in the unknown. Other than he did in the sickly and unattractive son of the second Lady Moorhampton.

Mabin had finished her story. Lord Moorhampton now intensely excited, went again to the telephone.

He had scarcely got the instrument to his ear and called out the assembler he wanted when the door opened and Lady Moorhampton came in.

Again the lady's glance was directed upon the secretary.

"Found out something? What?"

Marie was trembling for the answer he would give her. Lord Moorhampton turned to his wife, and said:

"Ciprian has left a son. My heir."

A cry of rage and indignation burst from Lord Moorhampton's lips, and in a flash Mabin saw the harm which his simple words had done. The lady turned with burning eyes and a voice hoarse with anger upon the girl.

"So it is you who have brought this absurd story? It is for that you came here, I suppose? Pray, in whose name are we? What do you get for this business?"

Mabin was too much disconcerted to reply. But Lord Moorhampton, a deeply shocked man, who hitherto had given his credit to the man he was for the most part, came between her and his wife, and answered the tremulous question.

"Whether the story is absurd or not remains to be seen. Edith, in the meantime, I am deeply obliged to your young lad, for the trouble she has taken in giving me the information."

Lady Moorhampton received her command, and tried to answer the indiscreet revelation on the part of Lord Moorhampton had brought upon poor "Dibs."

The People Forget Slowly

"Another point overlooked, and very naturally overlooked, by Professor Munsterberg is that Great Britain is a democratic country. The temper of the people is to tend to make him who has been knocked down, was just able to let me out before he became unconscious, with a great wound in his head. Another man had gone away, and I never heard of him again until this day here. I had no idea who he was—till then. But it was he, I know, who attacked your son, and I am sure he will be sent out to happen again. They told me the man attacked walked away all right, but that can't be true. He had taken up the telephone that lay on his desk, and now he put it down in his hand, and then he said,

"Yes. He has left a child, a little son. He is at my mother's house."

A lady employing a colored man asked him his name. "Mah name is Foy, ma'am," he replied. "I work for Edgar Allan Poe."

The man's eyes opened with great surprise. "What?" he gasped, pointing down to himself, "why, Ah am Edgar Allan Poe."—Everybody's Magazine.

"You have been accused of being a prevaricator."

"Well," replied Senator Sorgum, "that sounds hopeful. The fact that you can delineate a word indicates that somebody is afraid of me."

The man slanted his head a little and looked critically at the glowing west.

"Not bad," he drawled. "Not bad for a little place like Hoopville."

English Farm Labor And the War

320,000 Have Left the Land for the Colors

The Journal of Agriculture (Eng.)

in a discussion on the English agricultural labor problem says it is estimated that 320,000 men have left the land in the United Kingdom since the beginning of the war, and to the end of last year there were 1,000,000 men in the armed forces, and 1,000,000 men in the various branches of the dominion.

The Minister's idea is to provide incentives whereby individual savings from one dollar up may be accumulated in a special war savings account until a certain sum is reached, when the depositor may be given the deposit of purchasing a War Saving certificate of the dominion government, which will be most attractive to the farmer, and will encourage him to remain in the land.

Referring to the possibility of the ex-service man settling in the dominions, or in foreign countries, the committee on agriculture has made a proposal to the dominion government, which includes a number of ex-service men who were not employed in farm work on the outbreak of the war will have to be re-employed.

As a means of improving conditions on the land, small allotments of land should be made near towns so that the ex-service man can find employment in those towns may provide at least a portion of their food supply in their spare time. It is further suggested that the government should stimulate the general farming that duties be placed on agricultural imports, which will be sufficient to encourage the production that is necessary to the farmer.

It is evidently the intention of those behind what is proposed to keep at home the prospective farmer, and to make him a man who will not migrate to this country. It also appears probable, in addition to this, Canadian farmers may find, after the war, that the United Kingdom will no longer offer a free market for their produce.

Sheep Farming

Splendid Opportunity Offered to the Returned Soldiers

Agriculturally, Canada is not having a very good year, and the sheep industry is not doing well.

It is suggested that the government should stimulate the general farming that duties be placed on agricultural imports, which will be sufficient to encourage the production that is necessary to the farmer.

Upon his return from England he will speak throughout the country on the subject and arrange any further organization that may be necessary to make the scheme a success.

The carrying out of the campaign will involve extensive advertising by both the dominion government and the banks, and the minister of agriculture favors a steady, persistent, rational propaganda, and not one of the sensational or whirlwind varieties.

To Teach Canadians Value of Savings

All Bank Branches to Be Used By Great Government Scheme

In carrying out the campaign of National Savings for the dominion, which he has in view, the Canadian Minister of Finance will utilize the 1,000 bank branches of the dominion, and the post offices, and the savings branches throughout the dominion.

The Minister's idea is to provide incentives whereby individual savings from one dollar up may be accumulated in a special war savings account until a certain sum is reached, when the depositor may be given the deposit of purchasing a War Saving certificate of the dominion government.

As a means of encouraging the holder to retain his savings, this particular soldier says: "No one would permit himself to be paid off on his savings unless he had the means to entirely retire him."

On one occasion all prisoners were lined up outside stark naked prepared to march to battle. A German army corporal, sharply jostled, said: "I am a boxer, and I do not care if I am beaten."

As a result of this, the Germans collected for wreaths for any soldier that might die, but we were not to be paid off on our savings.

"What's the matter?" asked the young doctor of a patient who seemed very much pessimistic regarding his chances.

"Oh, I don't know, doctor; but I feel that I shall never pull through here."

"Nonsense, my boy—nonsense! Why, your case is absolutely the same as an illness I had years ago. You look at me strong and hearty as ever."

"Yes," replied the patient, "but, then, I expect you had a good doctor."

"What will happen if I don't?" whispered the other in reply.

"You'll lose the case."

"All right," answered the defendant, resignedly, "then lose it I'll have to."

The Aperture

How Huns Treat Prisoners

Got Seven Days for Stealing & Carrot

An escaped British prisoner from one of the German camps furnishes up-to-date light upon the treatment that is still meted out to English and Colonial men in at least some camps.

The German authorities have again been surprised to learn that, with his usual bluntness, the man who has been captured by the British, and is now serving seven days for stealing a carrot, has again been sentenced to seven days for the same offense.

It is reported that the British authorities have given him a choice of either serving the sentence or being sent back to the British camp.

No Mortgage On Europe

GET A FARM OF YOUR OWN

TAKE 20 YEARS TO PAY

The land will support you and pay for itself. All the land areas of the most fertile land in Western Canada are available for purchase in terms, ranging from $10 to $20 per acre for simple rail—irrigated lands from $35. Terms can be arranged to suit individual cases. In irrigation districts, loan repayable in twenty years—interest only 6 per cent. You can get a loan on your farm holdings by getting adjoining land, or secure title to your farm. For literature and particulars apply to

ALLAN CAMERON, General Supervisor of Land Settlement Resources, C.P.R., Desk 50, Calgary.

The cost of the war to Britain to date has been about $10,000,000,000. To Germany it has been about $12,000,000,000, to France $12,000,000,000, and to Russia about $9,000,000,000. To the aggregate of the vast war expenditures in Europe, amounting perhaps to $75,000,000,000, the holding of foreign securities in the United States bear a relatively small importance. The European belligerents have borrowed in the United States, roughly, a billion and a half. Considering the scale of their domestic financing, that amount is small, and up to the end of the war could be taken up and converted into home obligations. Britain had, before the war, about $20,000,

000, invested abroad. Germany had about $5,000,000,000. Austria, holding a billion and a half of Hungarian securities could be liquidated by the issuers of those obligations by sacrificing a small part of their own foreign investments. Thus the popular idea that the United States is getting a mortgage on Europe is very fanciful. The fact that Britain has, in settling her own and her Allies' balances in the United States, shipped huge quantities of gold, bringing the supply of the yellow metal in the United States up to the point of saturation, is a fact which must be taken into account in the consideration of the financial situation.

The White Indian

You can't always tell a man's color by his face. Real "whiteness" is a matter of character rather than countenance.

Ten years ago never been more graphically illustrated than in the case of Philip Big Swan, a Treaty Indian, and an ex-pupil of the church of England School on the Pagan Reserve. Philip Big Swan was not great, but he was voluntarily forwarded to the Secretary of the South Alberta Indian Commission, who sent him to the Canadian Patriotic Fund the sum of $10.00 as a contribution to the Fund. He says he cannot go himself to fight for the liberty of his people, but he wants to do his best to help others.

In everybody in this community as well as Philip Big Swan of the Pagan Reserve?

We understand that the total receipts for the opening day at the new hall at Frank amounted to about $550.00.

Miss Margaret Patterson has accepted a position with the Frank school board, as teacher of the primary department.

Corp. J. Jeffries, of Hillcrest, and Pro.

J. Flowers, of Beaver Mines, have been wounded in action.

An admission of 50c for adults, and 25c for children will be charged, the proceeds to be divided between the Red Cross Society and the Methodist church.

Trail Lights Needed

The necessity of having lights along one of the beautiful walks along the base of Goat Mountain was brought forcibly to the mind of one of Blairmore's most prominent citizens on Sunday night last, and the poetry below has been handed us by an eyewitness to a "head-on" collision:

"There was a young girl from Chicago, Who came with her trunk and her cargo, But now she does say—

"She thinks she'll go back to Chicago.

For one night in the dark, through a lane

Not so very far off from our city,

She walked alone—

"A miner, boy,

And what happened just then was a pity,

For they met, with regret, 'twas all done

in a flash,

For miles you could hear the screams and the crash.

"They saw millions of stars,

Far more than Mars,

And wished to be taken back in the cars.

What poor Charlie said I would not dare say—

It would never bear well with the light of the day;

But after this ever, when out late at nights,

You'll always find Charlie well armed with a light.

But I'm glad to tell that they're now getting along well,

But really this isn't a joke—

As You'd certainly find out if you're hit on the "snout."

Or received a square biff on the

"koko."

A Wise Geezer

There was an old geezer and he had a lot of sense;

He started up a business on a dollar

eighty cents—

The dollar for stock and eighty for rent—John three lovely dollars in a day, by gad!

Well, he bought more goods and a little more space,

And he played that system with a smile

on his face,

The customers flocked to his two-by-four

And he soon had to hustle for a regular store.

Up on the square where the people

pass,

He gobbled up a corner that was all plate

He fixed up the windows with the best that he had.

And he told 'em all about it in a half page ad.

He soon had them coming and he never,

never quit.

And he wouldn't cut down on his ad

one bit.

Well, he kept things humping in town

every minute.

Why, nobody calls him the Merchant

Prince.

Some say it's luck, but that's all bunk—

Why, he was doing business when the timer struck.

People have to purchase and the geezer was wise.

For he knew the way to get 'em to advertise.

North Dakota Scheme Tried in Saskatchewan

Organizing Farmers' Non-Partisan Political League in Effort to Control Legislature

Organization of a farmers' non-partisan political league is being attempted in Saskatchewan, and already, according to its organizers, nearly 2,000 farmers have paid $15 each into a common fund. The organization states that they intend to tax the capital and labor of the province for the financing of their schemes, which include government-owned flour mills, elevators and packing houses. They also desire rural credit banks. The campaign will be carried on all winter, and the new league hopes to take the field in the spring with a massive election. The plan is imported from North Dakota, where the farmers captured the legislature three to one at the last state elections.

Folk Lore of London

The Present Day Belief in Charms and Amulets Is Astounding

Investigating folk-lore, legends, customs, and superstitions, and collecting evidence of the same has been the special hobby of Mr. Edward Lovett for many years. The results of his travels and inquiries in England alone may now be seen in one of the strangest volumes ever brought together, illustrating the folklore of London.

The extent of present-day belief in charms and amulets is astonishing.

How many Londoners, for instance, know what a "witch ball" is? Yet, according to Mr. Lovett, which balls were used for protection against sweet-stuff shops, in the south and Southwest London, "for luck"; and very seldom will ear owners part with their rings, which may be any one of their old miseries.

These with balls are made of brown colored glass, and are generally colored the color of cedar wood. They are suspended by means of a metal ring cap. In the old days the balls were hung up to drive away evil spirits.

For protection against lightning, rings are recited in France and Italy; and in Constantinople every self-protecting druggist suspends, in his open shop front, glass balls as large as pineapples.

Remembering Sloan's Liniment, Jones applied it to the sore spots and went to bed. Next morning he awoke with morning fitting fine; in fact, the balls were entirely forgotten about the hike and went out for a four-hour drill the next day as spry as ever.

He had the same experience along, and many a boy on the border regarded the ailing of a sprain, strains, bruises, insect bites, cramped muscles, rheumatism, etc., by the use of Sloan's Liniment.

Easily applied without rubbing, At all druggists, 25c, 50c and $1.00.

Among other objects to be seen in the exhibition are cat-skins, human hair, horseshoes, donkeyheads, handkerchiefs, scars, acorn shells, a ship in a bottle, evil-eye Hebrew charms, and stones with natural holes.

Cat-skins are worn over the chest as a "cure" for rheumatism; teeth in little bags round the necks of infants are alleged to ease teething; "there is no greater remedy for lightning, and so do neophytes of Acronia are also regarded (not by the superstitious, alone) as a cure for dysentery; who stood near a dead willow must assuredly drive away the nightmare" with the aid of a lively imagination and a simple diet.

She took a course of fasts to the injured, and, after long and anxious waiting, the street accident she had earnestly wished for took place. She had broken her leg; she confiscated the walking stick of her parents and broke it in three pieces for splints; and so enthusiastically cheered by the crowd when all was completed she summons her car and took her patient to the hospital.

"Who bandaged this limb so creditably?" inquired the surgeon.

"I did," she modestly replied.

"I did, and more neatly done," said the surgeon, "but you have, I see, made one little mistake."

She felt terribly self-conscious.

"She has bandaged the wrong leg," he said quickly.

One more necessary than malaprox, Amy experience had demonstrated.

And, and, and, and, and, and, and,
